Results team are tireless

AFTER the brilliant and well-patronised Welcome Run, Marg Saunders had her work cut out to present accurate results. The problem arose during the team's handling of 100-plus visitors.

"They were given a V-tag and also a paper number (with the same number as the V-tag) – which is the usual thing to do," Marg told me later.

"However I also realised that some wore a Masters number; so they only needed a Visitor tag. When this happens we write down the V-tag number and also their member number; and when the results are being checked we change their V-tag number for their correct Masters number.

"This step – which worked really well last year – was not done due to the large volume of athletes.

"It took me a little detective work today to work out that they were members who did not register last year, and so did not receive a tag or have any knowledge of our new system.

"I doubt that this will occur again as we will not generally have that many real visitors.

"However it was fantastic to see the large number who

Two of the results team in action at Mosman; they even make time to run well! Mark Hewitt is ahead of Marg Saunders.

ran with us. I believe that is largely due to social media as Mark Kerr is using Facebook to promote our events each week. His post was then reposted on other Facebook sites."

Thanks to all

I have jokingly written in the past about the many ways competitors use to confound our results system. But I think we can justifiably point out how much our team needs to be on the ball to avert cock-ups.

Our many hardworking volunteers deserve huge thanks – but they will continue to work whilst they feel valued.

"Just thanking the volunteers who are on the corners or drink stations can bring a smile to their faces, thanking the race directors and others is so simple but does mean so much," says Marg.

Our system works well and is, I know, the envy of other clubs which struggle to raise enough helpers, even though they have fewer events than Masters.

THANKS to our Christmas morning tea fairies – Elaine Dance, Jacqui Beaumont, Gail Castensen, Sue Danby and Marcela Ruiz, writes Delia Baldock.

The Welcome Run morning tea helpers were Elaine Dance, again; Margaret Bennett and Lesley Dowling.

Also John Fisher has told me about an app that can make a video map of people's runs from their devices such as Garmin. You need to register with the website: www.relive.cc

Vale Chris Tittel

MAWA member Christian Tittel has sadly passed away from cancer on 26 December aged 90.

Chris was an enthusiastic thrower who just recently competed successfully at Worlds in Malaga and has State Records in M90 Discus and M85 and M90 Hammer, Weight Throw, Shot Put and Throws Pentathlon.

Many Masters are WAMC Spartans

JIM Barnes kindly passed me a copy of the Marathon Club's October newsletter, which lists all those runners who have finished 10 or more Perth Marathons. WAMC dubs these people 'Spartans'.

The list was compiled by Bob Braid, who has completed 25 Perth Marathons, the quickest of them in 2:54:46

I have included here any of our club's current members, a few past members, and other well-known names.

* Marge Forden is Master's only female Spartan.

Club Committee Notice

Posted on December 17, 2018

WE have listened to member suggestions and are making an effort to consider the environment. The club is phasing out plastic drinking cups and replacing them with paper cups. We are also replacing existing rubbish bags with plastic bags that are biodegradable.

- Get your name printed on your club number. Just see Russell Smith and leave your number with him. $5 to members: MAWA is subsidising $2.

- Planning application for our store/clubroom project has been submitted to Canning Council.

- A one-piece club uniform design has been approved, and we also looking at compression top designs. See Mark Howard if interested.

- Emergency contact numbers are written on Sunday tags. If members have changed their contact, and want the correct one on the tag, they can see Delia to order a new tag.

IN MY VIEW ...

I put on a few years, and some bandages for this month's picture, from the cover of a book I have just published on Amazon/Kindle. It's a satire about a bunch of greedy toffs and politicians who rig a postal ballot to drag England into the EEC. Sound familiar? If you want to have a look, here's the link!

https://www.amazon.com/NO-WAY-HtnmWytht-VICTOR-WATERS-ebook/dp/B07M84K35F/ref=sr_1_1?ie=UTF8&qid=1547630471&sr=8-1&keywords=NO+WAY+TO+HtnmWytht

Vetrun lists only age-group winners

THE club committee reports that members are becoming confused by the way Vetrun shows Sunday results. Full results are on the club website promptly every week, thanks to our excellent results team.

It was decided long ago that full results in Vetrun would be a waste of valuable newsprint.

So now we list only age-group winners (W45, M50, etc) for each event, in finishing order. That's why, some weeks you might find your name printed. It's because you were the best in your age group, that week, in that event.

The next time you compete you might not make it into Vetrun – because someone else in your age group was quicker.

The Vetrun lists allow everyone to see who's fastest in their own, and every other group, in each of the Sunday runs and walks.

To gain this information for yourself you would need to look at every set of full Sunday results; find the people competing in a particular event in which you are interested; and deduce who is best in that age group, that week, over that distance.

Vetrun does this for you.

The demise of 007

I DON'T have much use for my mobile phone, carrying it mainly for emergencies, such as locating the nearest pub. Not having turned the thing on for a month or more I was surprised to discover it had died, for lack of sustenance. It seems you must feed them money.

Unfortunately the corpse could not be revived, and 007 had met his match.

Why 007? Like most people I couldn't tell you my phone number – except for the last three digits, which were 007. For obvious reasons they stuck in my mind.

So now I have a new, very anonymous number with no colour or style at all.

I'll miss 007, even though I rarely called it to action.

It gave me a sense of security, almost as comforting as having the old Walther PPK in its tooled leather holster snuggling against my chest.

Liz Gomez could afford to smile; she had already won the handicap trophy and didn't need to take a single stride at Canning!

THANK YOU to all who attended the Canning Caper. We had a reasonable morning. A little warm, but not too hot. Bit of a breeze, keeping you cool at times.

A minor issue of a big tree branch falling over the path caused some inconvenience. It was lucky it was somewhere we could see the hazard. Then, try to make the path as clear as possible – as it was originally right over the path.

We appreciated the helpers on the day, including many regulars who make my job easy. Also, a shout out to Mark and his team who educate us before the run on the scan/tag system. They were also there early to educate the finishing team on

Thanks to handicapper Tristan Bell for explaining how the Handicap Trophy is organised

THE Handicap competition is held over eight handicap events in the calendar year.

The Handicap Trophy is awarded to the runner who has the highest aggregate finishing position over at least five handicap events run in that calendar year.

If a runner competes in more than five events, only the five best positions are counted.

For example, this year's winner, Elizabeth Gomez,

Jan Jarvis' start (above) would qualify for Monty Python's Ministry of Silly Walks. But photographers dive for cover when Silke Peglow (right) heads our way!

Canning Capers and contortions!

Hold on, can't feel anything; I don't think it's beating!

It's definitely not beating; no way. Oh, of course; wrong side!

This is not good; I can go higher. Try the other leg?

Ah yes, better....but I think I've got it!

Masters' most prolific marathoner in pre-race preparation. We think Miki could be in the Crouching Tiger position ...

competed in seven races and only her five best finishes were included in her total.

In contrast, David Baird only completed five races, so all of his finishes were included in his total.

The table only shows those runners who completed five or more handicap runs this year. There were plenty who did three or four, but the rules state five are needed to be eligible for the trophy.

Each number in the table shows the finishing position of the member in each race.

The green numbers are the best five finishing positions for each runner, and those numbers added together make the member's final result.

The numbers not highlighted are the finishing positions in excess of the member's best five runs, and are discarded in the final reckoning.

Marshalling? It's an acquired skill

A perfect example of laid-back Aussie marshalling skills was displayed at Mosman. Using only one hand this nameless artist took complete control of a broad field of contestants. New members – alert! This technique takes years to perfect. Don't even think about trying without supervision.

Hi Russell!
Photographers try hiding (how do you think we take those embarrassing candid?) But runners insist on spotting us and waving. Ah well, nice to be noticed I suppose!

Director: Paul Hughes

THE run this year was cooler than last year and numbers were also lower. However, the run was a success with members advising how they enjoyed the challenge and making some constructive comments to make it better. Feedback last year requesting an extra drink station was taken on board and one was set up at the beginning of the second lap.

A special thanks to all the helpers who assisted me. Their contribution not only makes my role as Race Director easier but also makes the runs/walks far more enjoyable for members and visitors

Our appreciation goes to the Mosman Park Cricket Club, particularly their president, Armando from Armando Sports, and to Mosman Park Town Council for allowing us to use the facilities at Tom Perrott Reserve.

See you all next year.

WHAT a relief! The weather turned out to be perfect (no rain, sunny, but not too warm) – perfect for running or walking ... or officiating. Also no junior cricketers, so we didn't have to run through the crowd of parent spectators this year.

There was a good turn up for this event. It was only my second year as director for Lake Gwelup, but I will be swapping with Sandra Stockman and Kevin Johnson next year. Makes sense as they live very nearby. I will take over their Australia Day event in Maylands.

One of my idiosyncrasies is being pedantic about distances for events. I know I am not alone in this. Anyway, in my pre-event announcement I mentioned that I had measured the course repeatedly using the club's measuring wheel and also tested it against my Garmin and Apple Watch.

I also said I would welcome any further inquiries about distance. The feedback I received was that in some cases participants measured 5km or 4.99km for the stated 5km/lap course. There may well have been others with greater disparity but I didn't hear of those.

I now look forward to running the Lake Gwelup course with fresh eyes under Sandra and Kevin's direction.

Mosman Park is a tough course, and you have to make the most of the downhill, like exuberant Julie Wilson, belying her W65 age-group with 29:35 for 5.25km.

Welcome Run

January 6, 2019
Director: John Fisher

NINETY-two visitors ran and walked into the New Year on January 6 with the Welcome Run. The marshals and morning tea crew took this surge of competitors in their stride and this support team performance was all the more creditable for two reasons.

Firstly, the temperature climbed to 38 degrees, testing fit and less-fit alike. Secondly, the building works at the start forced a split-start, separating the 12km and 5km athletes in order to reduce congestion. The tightest point was where the shared path choked between the construction fencing, the outdoor cinema and what appeared to be the Perth leg of the Tour de France!

All the 12km and 5km runners and walkers handled this obstacle with alacrity.

Oscars!

Marshals and morning tea crew are hereby nominated for the Academy Award for Best Supporting Role.

The walkers and runners who form the face of the club battled the heat to achieve their New Year resolutions. At the elite front of the 12km Chris Lark, Kim Thomas, Patrick Jones, Paul Beckers, Rochelle Rogers and Matt Byles stormed home, despite some of them having completed training runs before the race.

In the 5km Ralph Henderson, Sandra Stockman and Ross Keane ran home with a strong field of visitors.

As ever, in the 5km walk the recorders proudly scanned the barcodes of veterans Victor Munoz, Haydn Gawne and John McDonagh with Peggy MacIver and Lynne Schickert in pursuit.

The morning tea crew certainly won Gold, Silver and Bronze for the day. As the temperature crept up we snuck ourselves into the shaded areas to catch up on the news of Christmas and the promise of 2019, eating a piece of fruit in the company of good friends. Truly a Welcome Run.

Growing your own food – and increasing your lifespan

GROWING your own food has many rewards, including providing you with fresher, uncontaminated produce, cutting your grocery bill, increasing your sense of well-being and slashing your risk of depression

Research shows gardening is the most common hobby among centenarians around the world, suggesting the benefits it provides may help maximise your longevity as well.

Gardening is good too

Also, research also shows that elderly individuals who garden on a regular basis have a 36 per cent lower risk of dementia than non-gardeners.

Likewise, farmers are one-third less likely to have a chronic illness than non-farmers and are less likely to die.

Gardening fulfils several healthy lifestyle criteria, including sun exposure, a supply of fresh, uncontaminated food, exposure to beneficial soil microbes, physical activity, social contact, stress relief, life purpose and life satisfaction.

Healthy soil

To grow nutrient-dense food you need healthy soil. The five basic principles to growing topsoil and building a healthy soil ecosystem in your garden include avoiding disturbing the soil microbiome, protecting the soil's surface, plant diversification, maintaining living roots as long as possible and incorporating plants that attract beneficial insects.

One of the simplest and most inexpensive gardening alternatives is to grow your own sprouts, which are also

A retreat from meat

INTEREST in vegan food has been booming across the rich world. Celebrity claims of veganism are everywhere: Bill Clinton and Al Gore, Serena and Venus Williams, Lewis Hamilton, Mike Tyson, Beyoncé, take your pick.

In America sales of "plant-based" foods – meaning foods that contain no meat, eggs or dairy that reliably says "vegan" to vegans but doesn't say "weird" to the less committed – rose 20% in the year to June 2018, according to Nielsen, a market-research group.

That was ten times the growth in food as a whole that year and two and a half times faster than vegan foods grew in the year before.

McDonald's is offering McVegan burgers in Scandinavia. The American restaurants in the TGI Fridays chain sell soybean burgers that ooze blood made of beetroot juice.

Tyson Foods, one of the world's largest meat producers, recently bought

According to Blue Zones longevity researcher Dan Buettner, who has studied the habits and pastimes of centenarians around the world, people who live to 100 and beyond have a number of things in common, including strong social support networks, daily exercise habits, a plant-based diet and gardening.

WHAT do oranges, lemons, grapefruits, limes and tangerines have in common, besides all being members of the citrus fruit family? These fruits are widely cultivated and consumed all over the world for their pleasant taste and health benefits. They are loaded with minerals, phyto-chemicals, dietary fibre, and vitamins, particularly vitamin C and folate.

Eating citrus can displace sugary processed desserts made with oil and white flour, so that reason alone provides protection. Most of the health benefits associated with citrus fruits are related to the wide range of phytochemicals present in these fruits. Phytochemicals are naturally occurring compounds found exclusively in plants; these compounds exert a wide range of protective effect on various organs in the body, including the heart. Credible evidence exists that supports the protective effect of citrus fruits against several disease conditions.

Can diet prevent cataracts?

*by Linda Carney MD
September 2013*

CATARACTS are the leading cause of blindness and vision loss, so it's no surprise that cataract surgery is one of the most common surgeries performed today. There are several factors associated with the development of cataracts, including what type of diet we eat.

Dr. Michael Greger's video clip points to a study that concluded, "Vegetarians and vegans had a significantly lower risk of cataracts than did meat eaters, with a progressive decrease in risk parallel with the amount of meat and other animal products in the diet."

This is good news for those that consume a whole-food, nutrient-dense, Starch-Smart® Diet, and should also encourage others to make the transition as well.

Why relationships are the key to longevity

Fostering and maintaining close friendships can help keep your brain healthier as you age

by Karin Evans
September 17, 2018

PLENTY of exercise. Healthy food. Positive attitude. Plain old good luck. There's lots of advice out there about how to keep body and brain in optimal shape as the years roll by.

But Louis Cozolino, professor of psychology at Pepperdine University, is deeply engaged with another idea. In his book Timeless: Nature's Formula for Health and Longevity, he emphasises the positive impact of human relationships.

"Of all the experiences we need to survive and thrive, it is the experience of relating to others that is the most meaningful and important," he writes.

His thinking grows out of the relatively new field of interpersonal neurobiology, based on the recognition that humans are best understood not in isolation, but in the context of their connections with others.

Our brains, Cozolino writes, are social organs, and that means that we are wired to connect with each other and to interact in groups. A life that maximises social interaction and human-to-human contact is good for the brain at every stage.

Blood pressure down, lung cancer risk up?

Snake-bites time?

THAT bite of summer has well and truly come early this year and with that heat, comes snakes.

Rob runs a medical/nursing education business teaching nurses, doctors and paramedics. His reports shows 3000 bites are reported annually; 300-500 hospitalisations result; and there are two or three deaths annually.

Average time to death is 12 hours. The urban myth that you are bitten in the yard and die before you can walk from your chook pen back to the house is a load of rubbish.

Two-hour marathon within reach, says record-holder Kipchoge

KENYA'S Eliud Kipchoge crossed the line to win the Berlin Marathon in record time, wrote Matt Dickinson in Weekend Australian on December 21, 2018.

There is funny footage somewhere on the internet of a treadmill set at the pace at which Eliud Kipchoge set a stunning world record in the marathon in September. Amateur runners clamber on and see how long they can last, which is not long at all, before being hurled backwards.

Finding a running track the other day, I decided to do a version of the Kipchoge test. Flattering myself that I am not in bad shape for 50, how long could I last with the little Kenyan if we set off together?

I knew 5km would be impossible — 14 min 24.90 sec? You must be joking. How about 400m in 69.19 sec (equivalent to 17.30 sec per 100m)? Only by throwing everything at it, gasping over the finish line, could I come even close.

So, one lap at a sprint.

Kipchoge did that lap 105 times in Berlin to smash the marathon record by an extraordinary 78 seconds — the biggest improvement in the event since 1967 — in a time of 2 hr 1 min 39 sec. His run into the history books has a very good claim to being the outstanding sporting achievement of 2018.

The man himself is understandably proud of a record that ensured that he was crowned male athlete of the year at the IAAF awards in Monaco this month. He ran away with that too, no contest.

A 167cm and 56kg sinewy package of frequent smiles, he sat down under winter sunshine by the Mediterranean to talk about how he wants not only to keep setting records—including smashing the fabled two-hour barrier—but inspire others to run marathons.

Athletes starving for success

ANNA Boniface seemed to have the world at her feet when finishing as the 2017 London Marathon's fastest amateur female runner.

Her performance earned her an England team place in that autumn's Toronto Marathon. The then 25-year-old finished the London race in two hours, 37 minutes and travelled to Canada six months later.

But 10 miles into her international debut, Anna's ankle fractured.

"It was the breakthrough that broke me," she told BBC 5 live Investigators.

"It was horrible. I'd never failed to finish a race in my life. I thought I could just struggle to the end somehow, but I realised I would not be able to go on, I just had to sit on the kerb and wait."

But worse was to come for the Reading runner. In addition to the stress fracture of her ankle, tests found poor bone density, including

Thanks to Geoff Vine for forwarding the story from the BBC website to Vetrun.

"Not many 60-plus members of our club will be starving themselves, but a few of our keener younger runners may benefit from reading this," Geoff suggested.

osteoporosis in her spine, which made fractures a real risk.

These symptoms were all hallmarks of a condition called Relative Energy Deficiency in Sport (Red-S).

This occurs when sports people restrict their diet in the belief that constant weight loss will keep improving performance, to such an extent that some of the body's functions begin to shut down.

The condition can cause a range of health problems in men and women including a drop in hormone levels; deterioration in bone density; a drop in metabolic rate and mental health problems.

HIGH fibre-intake is linked to lower risk of heart attack, stroke and cancer according to a major new study published by The Lancet and commissioned by the World Health Organisation.

Observational and clinical studies undertaken over nearly 40 years, comparing those who eat most to those who eat least, suggest that eating at least 25g to 29g or more dietary fibre a day can lead to a 15-30 per cent decrease in all-cause and cardiovascular-related mortality.

Also, eating fibre-rich foods reduced incidence of coronary heart disease, stroke, type 2 diabetes and colorectal cancer by 16-24 per cent. The impact translates into 13 fewer deaths and six fewer cases of coronary heart disease per 1,000.

Researchers included 185 observational studies and data relating to 135 million person-years and 58 clinical trials involving 4,635 adult participants.

Anna, who works as a physiotherapist, admits she was aware of the condition but was so desperate to keep improving that she ignored the warning signs, which included not having a period for eight years.

"It was a lot to do with my training volume and not eating enough — not being wide enough in my food groups, being restrictive with carbohydrates," she says.

"I was training twice a day, I was running 100-plus miles a week at times, and you burn up a lot of energy with that, and from a runner's perspective you get it into your mind that you need to be this race weight."

"You get caught up in this cycle of running really fast, wanting to lose a little more weight, push that race weight a little bit more, running faster, and then just breaking, which is what happened."

The state of Anna's health was discovered before any more serious damage could be done and, after a year's rest, she has been able to slowly return to running.

Red-S can affect male and female athletes and became a recognised condition in 2014 — replacing another condition called female athlete triad, which recognised the affect of too few calories among sportswomen only.

There have been few studies into the prevalence of the condition but it is understood to be most common in sports such as athletics, cycling and dancing, where being light could make a significant difference to performance.

Secrets of Ultra-Geezer, world's fastest 70-year-old marathoner

by Jason Gay
Wall St Journal,
December 26 2018

LET me introduce you to your new favourite American athlete: Gene Dykes.

Retired computer programmer, lives in the Philadelphia suburbs, married to a University of Pennsylvania economics professor, two grown daughters, one grandkid. Likes to garden, plays golf a few times a month, once got pretty good at bowling, to the point he rolled four perfect games.

But here's why we're talking about Gene Dykes today: He just ran a world record sub-three hour marathon ... at age 70.

Dykes' 2:54:23, which he ran at the Jacksonville Marathon on December 15, shaved a startling 25 seconds off the 70-74 age group mark set by the late, legendary masters distance runner Ed Whitlock, of Canada.

It was a record that many – including Dykes – assumed would never be broken.

"I didn't think this one was in my reach," Dykes told me the other day on the phone, from his home in Bala Cynwyd, Pennsylvania.

"Going into this year, I'd never run a marathon under three hours."

What makes Dykes' rise to record-setter so striking is that he was, by his own admission, a very average runner until he got a coach in his mid-60s.

Dykes, who grew up in Canton, Ohio, competed in track in high school and in college at Lehigh University, but, as he tells it, he wasn't even close to a star.

"I was so, so thoroughly trounced on the track, that I really have this lifelong impression of myself as a mediocre runner," he said.

Dykes would graduate college, get a PhD in biochemistry, make a career in computer programming, and start a family. He ran on occasion, but only as a hobby.

"Sometimes I'd be in decent shape, sometimes not," he said. "I didn't race. There's a big difference between racing, and just going out there and jogging for the fun of it."

Six years ago, Dykes retired. By then, he'd been doing some racing, which he enjoyed. His times were very solid – he ran a 3:16 marathon in 2012 – but he thought a coach might help him go to a higher level. He hired a local trainer named John Goldthorp and told him he wanted to win his age group at the Boston Marathon.

"Who is this guy?" Goldthorp recalled thinking.

A partnership was born. Dykes, who will train through the winter in the Philly cold and snow, is blessed with a runner's reedy frame – he's 178cm and walks around at about 65kg, dropping to 62kg for big races. But he isn't obsessive about a lot of the things runners obsess over.

"Just run"

"I never stretch, never do flexibility exercises," he said. "No weightlifting, no strength, no core."

Dykes doesn't count calories or adhere to any special diet. "I tend to eat healthy, but I'll eat junk food with the best of them," he said.

Instead Dykes sticks to a much more straightforward philosophy:

"Just run," he said.

"Gene's hard days have evolved," Goldthorp said. "He's able to do very hard sessions now, sessions that I never would have programmed for him in year one."

The coach believes Dykes' secret is "consistency over time, just like investing".

Ultra fan

A devoted fan of super-long-distance ultra-running – in 2017, Dykes did three 200km events – Dykes racks up an enormous amount of mileage. It's Goldthorp's job to tailor Dykes' training for big targets, like this year's push to crack three hours in the marathon, which Dykes did for the first time this spring in Rotterdam, running 2:57:43.

It was the first time anyone other than Ed Whitlock had broken three hours at age 70 or older.

Dykes' success has reached the level that he's even been tested by antidoping officials a few times. "That's when you know you've arrived," Goldthorp said, laughing.

Said Dykes: "I was very happy to have the opportunity to prove I only have the joy of running to pump me up."

Goldthorp said it wasn't until late last year that he and Dykes began to entertain the possibility of chasing Whitlock's 70-74 mark. "It just seemed untouchable," Goldthorp said. Whitlock, a snow-haired Canadian who famously trained in a cemetery near his house and died in 2017, remains a giant of distance running, with dozens of records across the sport.

"Let the record show that for age group world records, it's still ED 35, GENE 1," Dykes said.

That kind of humility is one of Dykes' most pronounced characteristics, said his youngest daughter, Hilary Shirazi.

"I'm glad he broke this record, because he'd never go out of his way to share his accomplishments," Shirazi said. "Even when I called him after (the record) to tell him I was proud, he said, 'I'm just an old guy having fun.'"

Dykes' wife, Olivia Mitchell, who teaches at Penn's Wharton School, confided that her husband's nickname is "#Ultra-Geezer". (Yes, she used a hashtag. Professor Mitchell is cool.)

What's next for Ultra-Geezer? At the moment, a rare stretch of time off – at least for a couple more weeks. But then Dykes will get right back on the road, stepping away from his focused marathon work to spend more time with his beloved ultra-running.

"On the day (my break) ends, I'm going to run a 50-mile race in Louisiana," Dykes said. "Two weeks later, I'm going to run a 50-mile race in Utah. When we get done, I'm going to run a 100-mile race in Texas, and two weeks after that, I'm going to run a 200-mile race in Australia."

He'll turn 71 on April 3. On April 15, he'll be at the Boston Marathon, attempting to crack three hours there.

"I do have this deeply embedded thing that I am just an ordinary runner," said Dykes.

VALE Rob Young

ROB Young, long-standing MAWA member and well respected among south west athletics as an athlete and a coach, passed away on January 14. His funeral was on January 23 at Bunbury Crematorium.

Rob lived in Collie and was an active member of the Bunbury club. He was a keen thrower, and a regular competitor in both State and National Championships.

Paula Kennedy of the Bunbury Club writes:

"RIP, Rob. I valued your experience and coaching over the last few years and enjoyed our chats when we were competing at the same comps recently."

Bob Schickert adds:

"For the 30 years I have known Rob he has been a thrower although I understand in his youth he was a very competitive middle-distance man with 800m being his best event.

"With Rob living in Collie our contact was only a few times a year at events like MAWA State Championships and City versus Country competition. I understand Rob did a lot of throws coaching work in the Collie/Bunbury area and in Perth before he moved to Collie. He was always a keen athlete and a gentleman and he will be greatly missed, leaving us too soon – just before moving in to the 75 age group.

"Rob came here from New Zealand many years ago. At the 2012 OMA Championships in Tauranga I worked as an official with his twin brother Ray; and of course it was difficult not to call him Rob!

"It was great to have known you Rob."
